

Celebrate The Life Journey Of Yale Njoma Miller

On Saturday, February 24, 2007, Yale Miller was killed near McMichael Middle School located at West Grand Boulevard and Rosa Parks. At approximately 5:15 p.m. on Wabash & Marquette in Detroit, fatal shots were fired at his blue 1993 Jeep, claiming his life at the young age of 35. He was a loving husband, father of four and community leader. At thirteen years old, Yale began his career in community service as a Peer Educator for the "How To Say No Program" of the Southeastern Michigan Family Planning Association. At eighteen years old, he received his certification as the youngest HIV/AIDS counselor in the State of Michigan. After working for the Detroit Health Department for over ten years, Yale enjoyed a teaching position at Timbuktu Academy in Detroit. He played an active role in his children's education at Nsoroma Institute where he chaired the father's (Baba's) club.

While employed by Catholic Social Services as a Prevention Specialist, Yale helped young people in several community groups with substance abuse and violence prevention. Always active in bringing about social change, Yale participated in a "Sit In" at Wayne State University which contributed to the creation of an African Studies program still being offered today. Baba Yale's dream was to provide the world a community of healthy families who lived in peaceful support of each other's needs. A self-sufficient community that enjoys clean air, water, wholesome food and children learning safely with the help of their parents in thoughtful harmony with modern technology. Please help support his joy and commitment, his wife Joya Elizabeth, his four children Fahd (Bahati), Edna Leona, Maya Jan and Ellyne Irene.

Please join the(PAMMM) Progressive Artists for the Millions More Movement for a celebration of the life of Yale Njoma Miller.
